Animal hide and unexpected bestiary

Michèle Forest's sculptures can be seen as adornments that take on meaning once they are displayed in space. Inspired by primitive art for its timelessness, but above all by the graphic and architectural structures she encounters in her daily life and memorises, the artist combines her expertise with a vocabulary of shapes and colours [...]

It is in the banality of the objects collected and in the artist's desire to organise them that we see the emergence of 'magical' supports, in the ritual sense of the term. Indeed, once composed, the structures become vectors of meaning that transcend the boundaries of the human world and border on totemic animal.

My work is the result of a cultural fusion between constructivism and traditional craftsmanship, between ancient civilisations and contemporary aesthetics.

When I sew together past and present civilisations in abstract textile pieces, it is always in a form of symbolic ritual designed to engage the audience.

In a context that values craftsmanship, I strive to create works that are both technically demanding and resolutely innovative, reflecting the richness and diversity of contemporary textile art
